Posted on May 1, 2018 by Green Newton

On Friday, May 4 (potential rain date – May 11) at 2:30 pm, SusFest will be the first ever Sustainability Festival to be held at Newton South High School (NSHS) in the art courtyard. Anyone, regardless of if they attend NNHS or not, is welcome to come. Tickets are $5 at the door, with all profits going to Mass Audubon Society, Save the Harbor/Save the Bay, and League of Conservation Voters. There will be several booths, ranging from educational booths to selling up-cycled clothes that are promoting student businesses like Indigo Clothing Co., as well as a “diy photo-booth section” and short yoga sessions. The event will be an open and fun place to hang out. There will be free food and food available for sale. There will also be live music from students in the Newton area, including the winners of Newton’s Got Talent, Upswing. The event is aiming to make information on sustainable practices more accessible to the public, with the hope of inspiring people from our community to take steps to adopt a more sustainable lifestyle.
